

RETAIL AND CONSUMER HUB

Welcome to the August 2017 edition of the Retail and Consumer newsletter.

There have been a number of significant developments in employment law recently, including, and perhaps most notably, UNISON's success in persuading the Supreme Court to declare the Government's Employment Tribunal fees regime unlawful, almost certainly leading to a significant increase in Tribunal claims in future.

July also saw the publication of the Taylor Review into Modern Working Practices. There has been much response to these recommendations across the UK, and this month Helen Almond discusses the impact the proposed changes could have on the Retail and Consumer sector.

We also have a piece from Real Estate Managing Associate, Nadia Milligan, which compares food and beverage outlet management contracts and hotel management contracts to examine the benefits and disadvantages of both.

Finally, Richard Wise from our Insurance team considers what we can learn from the recent Ted Baker case on when policyholders can expect their insurer to comment on policy terms.

We hope you enjoy reading this month's edition.

What the Taylor Review means for the retail and consumer sector

On the 11 July the Taylor review was published which made recommendations on the reform of working practices and worker status. This article discusses the proposed changes and how they may affect those operating within the retail and consumer sector. Please find a link to our article <a href="https://example.com/heres/here

Food and beverage ('F&B') outlet management contracts and the synergies with hotel management contracts

The hotel management contract is a popular form of hotel operation that grew to popularity during the 1970s. This article looks at the similarities between this established form of contract, and food & beverage management contracts, which are fairly new, as well as any issues that those operating in these areas need to be aware of. You can read this comparison here.

Lessons learned from Ted Baker vs AXA Insurance

In the recent case Ted Baker Plc and another v AXA Insurance UK Plc and others, it was held that Ted Baker's failure to provide profit & loss and management accounts to its insurers was a breach of a condition precedent concerning the provision of information, and Ted Baker's claim failed. Ted Baker appealed this decision and, when considering the claim, the Court of Appeal commented on the extent of insurers' 'duty to speak.' This article considers what we can learn from this case, to find out more click here.

IP Breakfast Seminar – 19 September Manchester, 26 September London & 28 September Leeds

In today's "Big Data" environment, retailers and brands gather, manage and use data for the benefit of their business. With the right approach, that data can be a significant asset. However, if not managed properly, it can lead to missed opportunities and exposure to infringement allegations, leading potentially to reduced revenue and damages payments. AG experts will give an overview of common issues encountered and how best to get it right. Social media channels and online marketplaces have equalled, if not, overtaken the more traditional outlets in providing a quick and direct line to customers, with systems like AdWords and AdSense ensuring that consumers see your adverts first. But with the rewards also come risks. AG experts will also look at the latest cases on use of trade marks to provide an understanding of what is allowed and what could be actionable.
