RETAIL CYBER SECURITY

HACKING CYBER SECURITY

Unlocking the secrets of cyber security in a connected world

The exponential growth of the internet has caused a shift in the way that businesses operate. Goods can be bought at the click of a mouse, through contactless payments and via mobile wallets. Although it offers scope for the development of innovative ways to drive growth, reduce barriers to trade and increase access to new consumer markets, our increasing dependence on cyberspace has also brought new risks. In the challenging, fast-paced digital environment, businesses need to reassess their commercial strategies.

- The importance of cyber security and compliance modelling has never been greater given the incredible increase in online sales.
- Numerous incidents involving retailers have recently been reported in the press demonstrating that even the largest organisations can be vulnerable to cyber attack and reputational damage and - increasingly - the scrutiny of industry regulators, such as the Information Commissioner and the FCA.
- A UK Government 2016 survey found that 65% of large firms detected a cyber-security breach or attack within the past year. 25% of these experience a breach at least once a month.
- The average cost of a cyber-security breach is between £600k – £1.15m for large businesses and £65k – 115k for SMEs.
- Examples of commonly targeted entities include corporate bank accounts, which often lack the added layer of security available within personal accounts.

- The Cyber Information Sharing Partnership allows Government and Industry to exchange information on cyber threats.
- Changes to the law will create new challenges for businesses, including the proposed introduction of the Network and Information Security Directive, which aims to bolster the security of critical infrastructure in the EU; the General Data Protection Regulation, which looks to offer a new perspective on protecting user data; and the possible extension of Section 7 Bribery Act 2010-type offences, to make it an offence for a "relevant commercial organisation" to fail to prevent financial crime generally.
- While existing insurance policies such as commercial property, business interruption or professional indemnity may provide some cover against cyber risks, businesses are increasingly buying specialised cyber insurance policies to supplement their existing insurance arrangements
